Lanier of the Cavalry New Discovery Has Revolutionized the Treatment of Skin Diseases Nothing in the history of medicine

By 2 o'clock that rig had been trailof back to town. There Ennis and Field and several troopers, with one or buo interested citizens, were in quest of tidings. There they were joined Mayhew himself, who had one more hope. Dora had a friend a few years older than herself who was martied to a conductor of the Union Parific railway and living in town. It might be that Dora had gone to her.

They found the house and hammered at the door and succeeded only waking a Chinese servant, who said, "All gone; b'long Omaha." They gent to the three stables in town, and all had "rigs" out. Most of them had gone to a dance at Arena, six miles east. "What's all the row about anyhow?" demanded the night watchman of one of these establishments. "There was that cockney sergeant fellow here along about midnight, asking questions and raising hades. The town marshal had a rumpus with him and went to bed mad." The half dozen hangerson about the rallway station and the roisterers at the one open all night saloon were growing inquisitive, if not impudent. The station master had gone home, but the lone operator, to for Mr. Osborn was round here early in the evening and had to be here at 6 a. m. to meet and take No. 5 over the Mountain division. Then John Chinaman had lied, said Mayhew, ready to break down.

Ennis. "Go to the hotel, lie down and leave the rest to me."

confident he could be in time. He knew the Mayhews only slightly. He had never before been stationed at regimental bendquarters, had seen and known Dora only since their coming to Fort Cushing and therefore had not, learned to share Bob's honest admiration for her. She might be all Bob thought her, a loving child and a true hearted girl in spite of her infatuation for this presentable young trooper spurring on through the dim moon light, town and station far behind, following a meandering sleigh and wagon track across the wide, dreary upland. riding, as a rule, parallel with the rail-"rigs" were passed, westward bound, or heard aught of Mr. and Mrs. Oswell by sight and would be sure to note them had they come to the dance. Five miles out a stage was encountered, loaded with exuberant revelers a spree and were now consumed with wrath because certain officers of the Jaw-from their own town, too-had

"A hull sleighful of 'em-three or four anyhow-came over there with that cockney sergeant you fellers keep at the fort, lookin' for deserters. You after deserters? Well, here's-hichopin' you don't get 'em."

It was all Jim Ennis wanted to know, "Come on, men!" he cried and spurred ahead, his wondering troopers follow-

Fitzroy's game?" thought Ennis. He reasoned it was after Dora that Fitzroy had gone; that in his jealous misery be had kept watch upon her, had followed to town on hearing of her flight, had followed farther, and this it was that gave Ennis the hope that she was ac companied by such worthy people as the Osborns. If that were so it could mean but one thing. It was to join Rawdon, perhaps to be joined to Raw don. Osborn had sent two messages

And of all colonels to investigate by wire and had received two early in matters at Cushing there wasn't one in the army Button would not rather have had than the very one who was coming-bluff, blunt, rasping old Riggs, best known to fame and Fort Cushing as "Black Bill"-"Bill Riggs to come and overhaul my regiment when it's notorious he never could command even a two company camp without having everybody by the ears! Such men aren't fit to be inspectors!" Indeed, there was much to warrant poor Button's disgust. He had preferred most serious charges against Lanier. He had accused him of quitting camp on campaign, quitting his guard in garrison, quitting his quar-ters when in arrest, failing to quit bimself of a money obligation, drinking and consorting with enlisted men, and in his letter of transmittal he had intimated that there were other misdeeds he might yet have to uncover, all, said Button, on the information of veteran officers and sergeants of the regiment, notably Captains Curbit and Snaffle, Lieutenants Crane and Trotter, Sergeants Whaling and Fitzroy, and here were both medical officers. both of his majors, two of his best captains, seven of his subalterns and nine-tenths of the women folk at Fort Cushing taking sides with Lanier and issue with him-their colonel and commander! And here, too, were Lieutenant and Mrs. Foster, highly connected. influential, wealthy, insisting that his most active and important witness, the unimpeachable Sergeant Fitzroy, had corrupted their coachman, run off with their sleigh and ruined (this was Mrs.

Foster) their horses. And the story Snaffie told Button before Foster could reach him was to the effect that Foster ought to be ashamed of himself for abusing Fitzroy for taking the sleigh in hopes of having s warm nest to fetch the poorgirl home in as soon as he'd found her. "Sure, did Mr. Ennis expect her to ride back on his cantle on so bitter a night? Faith. Fitzroy was worth the whole pack of 'em put together if they'd only let him

And that, at 9 o'clock, when Ennis was sent for, was the colonel's way of looking at it. Moreover, he had a rasp up his sleeve for our massive young friend on half a dozen other

"In point of fact, Mr. Ennis, that girl has simply fooled the whole party and is probably laughing at all of you. A girl that will run away without a word or line to her father and marry an out and out adventurer, a mere nobody, has neither heart nor head anyhow. And now you've interfered in a matter of discipline just as Mr. Lanier did, and I gave you credit for better sense. You know I had ordered that fellow's arrest."

And so all Fort Cushing seemed in turmoil and trouble as the sun of the 23d went out and "Black Bill" came in, yet that sun must have been potent, for Mrs. Stannard's face as homeward she sped after a long talk with Mrs. Osborn was radiant with sunshing smiles. "You're not to know anything yet, Luce, at least until you get it from Dr. Mayhew, for you never could keep it, and for a week at least it's got to be kept."

"Well, one thing you can tell," said the major-"that is, if you know-and put a stop to an awful amount of censure that poor girl's getting. Why did she leave no word for her father?"

"Because she expected to be home in wo hours." And the reader can judge just how full and satisfactory must that answer have been. Now, whatever Mrs. Osborn had fold that so cheered Mrs. Stannard, It is certain the latter could not contain herself long and that even as the major was summoned toward 9 of the evening to join the solemn conclave at the colonel's (where by this time Button had opened proceedings by giving "Black Bill" the best dinner a frontier larder and cellar afforded) she bustled over to the Sumters', was delightedly welcomed by her friend and neighbor, whose husband, too, had been called 💠 to council, and presently these two sages were in confidential chat, To them presently entered the captain, electric, bristling. He wanted the bundle of latest newspapers. They had not balf read them, and Colonel Button was all eagerness to see some articles concerning the campaign about which Riggs had been twitting him, asking him whom he had subsidized at this late hour to rescue his reputation, etc. Riggs had seen three long, well written letters in the great New York Morning Mail, obviously the work of a correspondent on the spot, an eyewitness to the scenes he had described, and these letters refuted the calumnies recently heaped on Button and his comrades—gave him, in fact, high praise for soldiership, bravery, energy, even though the writer owned himself by no means one of the colonel's circle, if, indeed, one of his personal friends and admirers. Only the Sunters at Cushing subscribed for the Morning Mail. Riggs had seen the paper at Omaha. It took a search of some minutes before even the first was found. Then Sumter's eyes danced as he read, and Mrs. Sumter exclaimed over another, and for the first time in a week sounds of hear arrose in that an eyewitness to the scenes he had de over another, and for the first time in a week sounds of cheer arose in that little home. Presently Mrs. Stannard read aloud a spirited, stirring paragraph, describing a dash led by Lieu tenant Lanter, and then Sumter made a swoop for all three pages and said The quicker Button can see these the sooner he'll come to his senses," and. begging pardon for his rudeness, took the papers and his leave and almost

And just as the twinkling switch lights of the little prairie station hove in sight ahead there came a sound that startled him-the whistle of a railway engine not a mile behind, No. 6 at last and coming full tilt, the very train, perhaps, that they, the young couple, hoped and meant to take and might have taken on their eastward way had not Fitzroy, keen eyed, quick witted and vengeful, been there in time to bar the move. And then in the soldier soul of big Jim Ennis was born a strange, sudden and somewhat unprofessional spirit of opposition. Starting out in the hope of finding and restoring to her father's roof the sorrowing fugitive, Jim Ennis veered right round to the purpose of succoring a maiden in distress. If marriage was Rawdon's motive in bidding her join him, then Rawdon was honest, after all, and who was he or who was Fitzroy to stand in the way

Five minutes later a young fellow in civilian dress was struggling in the grasp of two detectives. A terrified girl was clinging to his arm, tears streaming down her face. A clerical looking elderly stranger was expostulating. A man in the cap and dress of a railway conductor was vehemently arguing with a stocky sergeant of cavalry, who seemed master of the situation and greatly enjoying his importance. A pale faced young woman, whom the conductor of No. 6 addressed as Mrs. Osborn, was imploring his aid when, to the amazement of the sergeant, this big subaltern in boots and spurs bulged in between him and Conductor Osborn and demanded to

"and this for Mr. Lanier!" Friday again and late in the day and Bob Lauler's arrest lacked but a few hours of its first full week, and Bob was in bandages and bed in a sunny room of the hospital. Paymaster Scott was up and about and in his independ ent way had been saying unrelishable things to Button, who was in a most peppery frame of mind. A wire had come from department headquarters to say an inspector would follow. "Instead of ordering a general court to try Lieutenant Lanler they have or dered a colonel out to try me, by gad," said Button, "for that's just what it all amounts to." ____
